

Abstract

A valve actuator for an internal combustion engine is described having a core having a wound coil located therein, 5 said core further having at least one permanent magnet located at least partially inside said coil and positioned at an angle relative to a direction of movement of an armature.